- GEOFFREY OF MONMOUTH, THE HISTORY OF THE KINGS OF BRITAIN

In the heart of the forest, a small stream flows through the trees. The water is clear and cool, reflecting the sunlight that filters through the canopy. A small bridge made of logs spans the stream, leading to a clearing where a group of people are gathered. They are looking at a large, glowing orb that has appeared in the sky. The orb is pulsating with a red light, and a low rumble is heard in the distance. The people are talking to each other, some looking up at the sky with concern, while others look on with curiosity. The atmosphere is tense and mysterious.

The orb in the sky was a sign of something great. It was a sign that the world was changing. The people of the forest had heard of the orb before, but they had always thought it was just a legend. Now they knew it was real. They had seen it with their own eyes. The orb was a sign of the end of the world. It was a sign that the world was coming to an end. The people of the forest were afraid. They were afraid of the unknown. They were afraid of what the orb might bring. They were afraid of the future. The orb was a sign of the end of the world. It was a sign that the world was coming to an end. The people of the forest were afraid. They were afraid of the unknown. They were afraid of what the orb might bring. They were afraid of the future.
